NHS Foundation Trust
Child health clinics

Child health clinics are available across Sutton. They offer you the opportunity to discuss your child’s growth and development and to seek support and advice with parenting and your own health and wellbeing.

Please remember to bring your child’s red book to clinic with you.

How often should my baby be weighed?

After the early days, as long as all is well your baby only needs to be weighed at the time of routine checks and immunisations.

Many parents like to have their babies weighed more often than this. However, this is not always helpful, and can cause unnecessary worry. Weighing too often can make it look as though weight has not been gained, for example, when one week your baby is weighed after a big feed, but the next they are not.

Weights measured over a longer time are more likely to show the true weight change.

Sutton drop-in child health clinics. Please note appointments are not needed for drop-in child health clinics.
